With the need to expand and the growth of GrowerLive, an additional office is needed.

July 2006

Tampa, FL: Innovative Technologies Group, Inc, a software development company, has recently announced the addition of a second office near Tampa, FL.

“As our workload increases and our staff grows, we have decided to add an additional office specifically for our development team,” says Deke Darsey, CEO, of the new expansion.

In anticipation for the needs of the company as GrowerLive, an Enterprise-class inventory management tool for the horticulture industry, becomes their main focus, Innovative Technologies has hired new software developers to meet their growing needs. The new building will be large enough to house the existing Development Team with room to grow. To keep the Development Team energized and fresh, a gym has been included in the new facility along with a break room and outdoor barbecue area.

The original building is now being used exclusively for administrative needs including accounting, reception and business meetings and presentations.

Brian MacKay, Vice President of Operations, states, “With the addition of another building there will be more to manage and I am looking forward to the challenge.”
